STATISTICS OF THE NUMBER, VALUATION, ACREAGE, AND POPULATION OF HOLDINGS
IN IRELAND.

PREFATORY NOTE.

(Copy of Returns.)

The information contained in the following tables has been specially prepared for the Commission by the Registrar General from the office summaries of the Census of 1900. As is well known, the Census Returns contain statistics relating to (1) the number of the various classes of holdings in each county in Ireland classified according to their valuation; (2) the total area occupied by each class of holdings; (3) the total valuation of each class of holdings; and (4) the total population living on each class of holdings. The original returns are collected according to townlands, and are combined in the Census Office into electoral divisions, thence into unions, and subsequently into counties. The information contained in the published Returns is shown by provinces, counties, and poor law unions, but not by electoral divisions, and as the latter is the unit of congestion, it is not possible to obtain from the Census Returns the information about the congested portions of a county which is available about the entire administrative county or poor law union. The Commission decided that it was important to have this information about the congested districts compiled from the manuscript summaries in the Census Office and published; and, as part of their inquiry has reference to the question of what areas (if any) outside the districts now scheduled as congested require to be dealt with as congested, and, as it was thought that the detailed information which would be obtainable from these statistics shown by electoral divisions, would throw some light upon the circumstances of the poor non-scheduled districts and also upon the means available for the relief of congestion there, it was decided by the Commission that the statistics should be published for every electoral division in Ireland. This volume is the result.

The returns have been arranged in the following manner:—The provinces are taken in alphabetical order, and the counties within each province, the unions in each county, and the electoral divisions in each union are all arranged in the same order. Each county is complete in itself and has four tables relating to it. The first shows the total number of holdings, and the number of holdings which do not exceed £4 valuation, between £4 and £10, between £10 and £15, &c., &c. in each electoral division, in each union, and finally in the entire county. Each electoral division that is scheduled as congested is distinguished by an asterisk, and at the end of the table the total is given for all the congested electoral divisions and for all the non-congested electoral divisions in the county. The other three tables are arranged in exactly the same manner; the second shows the total area occupied by the holdings of each class; the third shows the total valuation of the holdings of each class; and the fourth the total population living on the holdings of each class.

As special importance may be attached to the figures relating to the congested districts, the following summary tables have been prepared:—

Small plots and quality of land.

The importance of the statistics contained in this volume—both as regards congested and non-congested areas—is fairly obvious. Now for the first time from an official publication it is possible accurately to estimate the agricultural congestion existing not only in the large area of a county—as could have been done from the Census Returns—but also in the small area of an electoral division.* Thus it is possible to know not only the number of holdings in any one electoral division which do not exceed, say, £10 valuation, their total valuation, the acreage over which they extend, and the population that live upon them; but it is also possible to ascertain exactly how much land is required in order to enlarge each holdings up to any given limit, say, £10 valuation. It is also possible to ascertain whether there are any large holdings in that electoral division above, say, £50, £100, £200, or £300 valuation, part of which might possibly be acquired for the purpose of enlarging the small holdings, and these returns also show the exact acreage and valuation of such classes of holdings in each electoral division as well as the population which they now support.

It is also possible to ascertain what is the proportion that the number of holdings not exceeding, say, £10 valuation bears to the total number of holdings not only in the entire county, but also in any particular district. The importance of this is pretty apparent, for whilst the ratio is so complete index to congestion, it is, ex ante, per se, a useful guide.† Thus the number of holdings not exceeding £5, and not exceeding £10 valuation in the congested districts are 55 per cent., and 37 per cent. of the total number of holdings in the districts, whilst the number of holdings not exceeding £5, and £10 in the non-scheduled areas of the counties containing congested districts are 25 per cent., and 34 per cent. of the total number of holdings in these areas. These figures show at once that whilst there is congestion outside the scheduled areas, it is not as a whole comparable with the congestion existing within these areas, and the fact that the statistics are published by electoral divisions makes it possible to localise at once—so far as the valuation of the holding is a test—the spots outside the scheduled areas where the condition of the people corresponds to that existing over the greater part of the congested districts.

The interpretation of the figures contained in this volume was touched upon in a memorandum submitted to the Commission by the Secretary, and printed in the Appendix to the First Report of the Commission [C.D. 2857—1906, pp. 351 et seq.]. It will suffice to remark here that, though these tables are necessarily returns of “holdings,” they are really returns of landholders, for, if one man has half-a-dozen farms in the same county, he is returned as having a single holding of their combined valuation. It is obvious that, so far as counties are concerned, these returns, being actually though not nominally returns of landholders, show more clearly the size of the problem requiring treatment than a return of holdings would—e.g., a man has in County Galway six holdings valued at £5, £5, £5, £10, £20, and £30; a return of holdings would in this case apparently suggest that there were at least three holdings needing enlargement; whilst the present returns more clearly indicate the situation by showing only one holding of £32 valuation. As regards the size of the remedial material that might be made available for relieving congestion, these returns might, however, mislead—e.g., in the case taken above the returns would suggest that there was in County Galway one holding of £68 valuation that possibly might be secured for the enlargement of small holdings; whilst in point of fact there are six holdings of varying size scattered over the county.

The interpretation of the figures becomes more complicated when they are examined not for the whole of a county, but for the comparatively small area of an electoral division—the present unit of congestion. In these returns, where one man has several holdings in County Galway but in different electoral divisions, or has one holding which runs into two electoral divisions, the total area, population and valuation are allocated to the division containing the holding or the part of the holding of the highest valuation; hence the figures in these returns do not represent the actual state of things in each electoral division, as they may include in each division land situated in other electoral divisions (of County Galway), and may include land geographically belonging to the division itself. Thus, the area, population, or valuation shown for an electoral division might be larger or smaller than the actual area, population, or of figures.

* The experience of having information for the smaller areas is really seen from a single illustration. The number of holdings not exceeding £10 valuation in the Glenties is 11 per cent. of the total number of holdings. This in itself might not seem to indicate very acute congestion in that area, though it is considerably higher than the proportion for the whole of Ireland (37 per cent.). But when we look at the figures relating to areas of the Electoral Divisions in the Glenties (which are also congested) and find that in three of the holdings not exceeding £5 are 50 per cent. and 36 per cent. of the total, the existence of very acute congestion is at once recognised and seen in precise localities.

† The ratio of valuation, to population, or the ratio between the number of small holdings and the number of large holdings can be regarded as a complete guide to the congestion or poverty of any particular division only (1) when the people are actually dependent on the land for their living, that is, where there are no supplementary industries, such as fishing, weaving, &c.; and (2) when the valuation is based on the present productivity of the land. The valuation of Ireland was, however, made between forty-five and fifty-five years ago and was not even then uniform throughout Ireland, and does not show for any improvement or deterioration that may since have taken place.

valuation of that division. Adjustments could have been made rectifying this, but they would have immensely complicated matters. Moreover, the returns would then have been based in part on holdings rather than on landholders, and this would, for the reason shown above, have exaggerated the size of the problem. Consequently the Commission, when the compilation of these statistics was under discussion, considered the relative advantages of adjusted and unadjusted returns of holdings and landholders, and decided that the unadjusted returns of landholders by electoral divisions would be the most useful.

Comparison between Census Returns and Agricultural Statistics.

It may be of interest to point out that information about the number of holdings and occupiers, classified according to acreage, is also contained in the Yearly Agricultural Statistics, which were issued formerly by the same office as the Census Returns, but which since 1902 have been issued by the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction. In 1901, according to these Returns, the number of holdings was 390,179 (A) and the number of occupiers was 543,238 (B), whilst the number of holdings, according to the Census returns (contained in this volume) was 400,331 (C). The discrepancies are for the most part easily explained. The Census figures, as has been already mentioned, though nominally returns of holdings, are really returns of landholders, and therefore (C) is properly comparable with (B) and not with (A), as might be imagined. The explanation of most of the difference between (B) and (C) is that the latter return is confined to agricultural holdings, and the former includes labourers' cottage holdings and gardens. Hence the difference between (B) and (C) in respect of holdings not exceeding one acre is over 45,000. Some of the discrepancies cannot, however, be thus explained, as this explanation can only refer to small holdings, and there are differences between B and C as regards every size of holding, as is shown by the following statement:—

	Number of Occupiers holding land in Ireland.
	Above 1 and not exceeding 2½ acres.	Above 2½ and not exceeding 50 acres.	Above 50 and not exceeding 100 acres.	Above 100 and not exceeding 500 acres.	Above 500 and not exceeding 1,000 acres.	Above 1,000 acres.
According to B.	109,645	67,379	84,365	11,341	5,137	3,392
According to C.	118,749	67,964	84,391	11,035	5,086	3,269

The explanation of most of these apparent discrepancies appears to be that the Census Returns, which are primarily concerned with the statistics of population, contain more complete information as regards the number of persons having more than one holding than do the Agricultural Statistics, which are, of course, more concerned with the crops grown on farms than with the number of individual occupiers. Hence, owing to the more complete information collected for the purposes of the Census about persons having two or more holdings, the number of occupiers of small farms is less, and the number of occupiers of large farms is greater, in the Census Returns than in the Agricultural Statistics.

Secretary.
